AstroByte: Planning for August 21, 2017 Solar Eclipse

Though it may seem strange to be talking about an event just a little under a year from now, the US will be experiencing a total eclipse of the sun on August 21, 2017. What is important about this eclipse is the path of totality is over the US. If you live in the right area, or are willing to travel a bit, you will be able to view the eclipse for yourself. It is not too soon to be putting in for a vacation day for this fantastic astronomical event. If you are in Kansas, a short drive up to Nebraska will put you in the path of totality. Find out more, make your plans, and gear up for August 21, 2017.

Visit the following website for information.

The Writing Center

The Writing Center will open for tutoring at 9:00AM on Monday, August 29.

At the Writing Center, we meet with undergraduate and graduate students in 30-minute sessions about writing projects for any on-campus course and at any stage in the writing process. Our goal is to offer useful questions, feedback, and strategies that will facilitate skills acquisition and engage the student in active learning. During the session, students will introduce their writing project, develop a plan of action, and take one or two steps in their writing process. At the end of the session, students will work with the tutors to summarize their activities and plan for next steps.

Please make appointments through the online scheduling system located on our website under "Make an Appointment": <https://www.fhsu.edu/WritingCenter/>. [Please note that the address has changed.]

Location: first floor of Forsyth Library

Fantastic Planet Dance this Weekend

Source: e-teachers@mailman.rice.edu

Don't miss the dance underway between Jupiter (dimmer and to the left) and Venus (brighter and below). Jupiter is plunging down to pass behind the Sun while Venus is climbing to take her place as the evening star. At dusk, on this Saturday evening, they will nearly touch (as seen from Earth).

Get out the binocs and take a view! (Also good in small and large telescopes). They will be so close that the naked eye might not be able to tell them apart Friday (like Mizar and Alcor in the handle of the Big Dipper). But you will need a viewing location with a clear view of the Western horizon, since they will be very close to the horizon. Also, tonight and for the next few nights, see Saturn, Mars and Antares all in a vertical line in the Southwest. And tonight may be your best view of Mercury - it's to the left of the bright Venus just at Sunset.
